Find eternity in each moment

The words in today's gospel are not meant to be ominous or scary. Jesus is not talking about the end of the world but about the end of all worlds. Everything passes. Nothing lasts forever. Our great hope is that there will be something that we can grasp onto, something that's eternal, something that's God. We want the absoluteness, the eternity of God. We live in a world of passing things, where everything changes, nothing remains the same. The only thing that doesn't change is change itself! That's a hard lesson to learn. This is not meant as a threat. This is meant so that we grab onto this day, we grab onto this life and we appreciate that it is all gift and while we breathe it in we enjoy it and know that it is another moment of God. To be present to this moment and to live it fully is the only way to experience eternal life. The people who take this moment seriously take every moment seriously, and they already experience heaven. Heaven is whenever we taste life to its fullness, when we enjoy the moment, when we know that it is a gift from God and it will not last. And yet that very 'will not last' is an invitation to go deeper into the moment and touch upon that which lasts forever. That's the paradox; that's the mystery; that's what our rational minds cannot understand and yet that's what the saints have always come to teach us. If what we do doesn't lead us into an eternal now, an eternal moment, an always true moment, an always loved moment, then we have not lived the moment at all.

Richard Rohr (Adapted)

There are moments when time stands still and we wish the moment would never end. In that moment we are in the flow, the wonder, and the unity of life - and it tastes good. Daniel O'Leary says that in these moments we touch eternity and because of that they do live forever.
